An Irishman's Luck

OUR SERIAL STORY

The road, which had been straight for a long stretch, averted to the left, and here in a clearing, of an acre or so stood the little red church, facing the blue waters of Otter Lake. Here, too, apparently, was a goodly portion of the Swedish colony, for rows of wagons were already drawn up along the side of the trail, many of them bedecked with boughs of poplar and spruce, the oaks which had drawn them used to the church yard fence or in the shade of the trees by the roadside.

Evelyn was evidently expected, for as Tom drew up at the wicket gate a group of school girls came forward to greet her and she was carried off to where their mothers were gathered round the church porch, while Tom drove a little further down the road and was unobtrusively the man who he was accosted by Jim Hardie.

"Good morning, Tom; a great day for a wedding, and I guess all Sweden will be here—you didn't hurry any on the road—it was half-past nine when we left Rosebank, and Mr. Jordan was getting fidgety we'd be late, but I told him they couldn't get very far on with the wedding without the minister."

"Oh, we took it easy; the road's pretty rough, and you see—"

"And you didn't like to hurry the mare—good-bye, you, Tom, well, along as I'll introduce you to some of the men folk, and then we'd better be getting into the church, there's Mr. Jordan just going in with his little black bag, and Ludwig is not the one to be late on his wedding day."

Even as Jim spoke a general movement of the scattered groups announced that the bridegroom and the bride had already come, and they had only time to follow the throng into the church itself, which was soon crowded to the door, where most of the younger men who could not find room stood without, hat in hand at the open windows around the porch.

The service which followed was a compromise between Mr. Jordan's loyalty to the Prayer Book and his dislike of the service not being understood by those taking part in it, and he was conscious that none of the older women and some of the older men had little, if any, knowledge of English. It began with the singing of a wedding hymn in Swedish, and during the singing of it a space was made for the bridal party to approach the altar and take their places in front of Herr Pastor, Mr. Jordan.

On the dais which the bridegroom stood was covered with a crimson cloth, on which, in a regular device, had been arranged the pearl-white blossoms of the wood-anemone. The bridegroom, Ludwig Nelson, was a fine, handsome, young fellow, neither self-assured nor yet abashed, simply and unaffectedly happy, with a sober reverence for the house of God, endowing his bride with an honest manhood worthy of the race of Vikings from which he was sprung. Amanda, the bride looking indeed the 'Rose of Sweden,' as Jim Hardie had named her long ago, simple-minded, the pure white of her marriage gown, untouched with color, save where a cluster of wild roses nestled at her bosom. Who can tell how the simple beauty of her love and faith shone through the blue softness of her eyes, as in accents that heeded not and again, she made her vows of wifely obedience and honor?

At the close of the simple service came a second hymn, a Swedish paraphrase of the twenty-third Psalm, 'The Lord is my shepherd,' and the mingled voices of young and old rose and fell with a full volume of sound to the evidently familiar words. Here and there, among the older women there was a faint winking away a tear, and it was not hard to guess what memories of other days and far-foreign lands the 'Lord's song' in a strange land, the true 'father's the woman; in the man it is his pride in his race and his fatherland in the woman it is the deep fountain of her love of family and home.

The words of the benediction, 'The ease of God be upon this marriage,' followed by the lifted hands were followed by a solemn hush, and then the congregation fled slowly and quietly out of the church, for when they did so, an avenue through which the bridal party passed to the churchyard gate.

Here, too, Jim Hardie and Tom followed their way, and were soon the centre of a little group of the older people. Glad to meet the newcomers, they welcomed them to Sweden, and Tom was secretly much amused to find himself being introduced, with much ceremony and taking of hats, as Herr Dennis, to men in decent suits of broadcloth, full fashioned as to the coat-tails, and with much shirt front and cuffs. He could hardly realize that these grave, courteous men, every one of whom as he told Daisy Enderby, were the same men who had often passed on the winter trail to town clad in furs and skins, in skin coats, plodding along by the side of their oxen and loads of cordwood.

Tom toiled up the rugged hill, and over, 'Old Carl' Swanson, Amanda's uncle, became their escort to the grove a little nearer the lake shore, where the marriage feast was to be held.

It was a spot not only beautiful in itself, but possessed of that particular beauty which harmonized with the spirit of these good North folk. It was the beauty of long and stately avenues of spruce and pine, where the green growths of the forest were the footfall with the silent softness of an eastern carpet. Above, through the long spreading plumes of the trees was the radiant blue of the wide openings of the forest trees.

From the lawn, preparations, it was evident long the marriage feast was a grove from the modest culture for which Amanda and Ludwig had hoped in the centre of a national festival in honor of the 'Rose of Sweden.'

Rows of tables, roughly formed of boards yet covered with spotless linens, had been laid out, and beneath the trees and over with a doubtful of a family in the color of the linens, blue and green, the guests were gathered, and in the white of their bread and the sweetness of the butter, and the richness of their food, and the restraint, due to the presence among them of Herr Pastor—as they invariably called him—Jordan—and of their other English guests, work away by degrees, and soon the words were ringing with mirth and laughter.

I wonder what time we should be starting for home,' said Tom to Jim Hardie an hour or two later, as they sat under a big spruce enjoying a quiet smoke and watching the groups of mosquitoes will be bad in the bush towards evening, and I promised Daisy Enderby to be back tomorrow.

Here comes the minister and Miss Raye; I guess we'd better ask them,' replied Jim as Mr. Jordan and Evelyn joined them. You two are here to-day; Tom and I were wondering what the orders were?

'We were just coming to see what you thought, Mr. Hardie,' said Mr. Jordan, 'I have promised to walk across to Pete Johnson's and christen a baby there, and Miss Raye is to go over with Amanda and her husband to see the presents at Mrs. Swanson's. I could be back at Otter in an hour or so if that will suit you and Mr. Dennis?'

'That will suit me fine,' said Jim, 'I'd like as I'm here to run up to my hay meadows—it's only a couple of miles north—just to see when my hay will be ready for cutting, and if Tom here will drive me up why, we will be back and ready to start—say at four o'clock.'

Surely Tom must have forgotten his promise to Daisy Enderby, or the mosquitoes have neglected to use their opportunities, which is not like turned into the lane at the village. It is true they were delayed a little at the starting, for there were libations of coffee at Mrs. Swanson's, to have forgone which would have cast a cloud over that good woman's hospitable soul; but still the slowness of the old mare would have been a scandal had there been any of Tom's sporting friends to see. Perhaps the spare mare herself was partly to blame; horses, like men, learn wisdom on a bachelor's homestead—the Sweden oats had been sound and plentiful—it was not for her to set the pace—if it were three miles an hour to-day it might be ten miles an hour to-morrow—carpe diem—though it is doubtful if her philosophy included the classics.

Yet they talked but little as the mare jogged quietly along—that was the danger of it—when a word is a sentence and a nod or glance of the eye an answer, when the one sees to peril and the other welcomes it, then it is that hearts are lost and won. Old Dr. Casey, when comparing himself and his rival practitioner in Minnesota, was often wont to say, 'I'm a darned fool and know it—Dr. Jones is a dander fool and doesn't, which, without any imputation of folly and in an entirely sympathetic spirit, may be a fair way of describing how matters stood with Evelyn and Tom as a result of their share in the bridal day of the 'Rose of Sweden.'

CHAPTER XIII
The Shadow Of A Cloud

The romance of hayingmaked with the introduction of modern machinery. It is no longer toil sweetened by a simple pride of skill in wielding the primitive tool of husbandry—the scythe—but toil that is accepted grudgingly as a necessary cog in the wheel of progress towards wealth. In the West 'the dewy call of incense breathing morn' is only an hour lost before the grass is dry enough for the mower to run. The emulation of farmer with farmer and rustic with rustic in the Old Land was the emulation that springs from a love of the soil, the joy of winning a cry consent from Nature to their wooing. The emulation of the West, with the farmer is the emulation of the blighted and the hunched in the settlement, and with the 'hired man' the emulation to command the highest wage. The hayingmaked of the old days was but it was companionable toil. The sturdy mowers followed one another at nicely adjusted intervals, sitting in time with scythe and rhythmic harmony of sound and motion, the broad swaths falling with a sharp swish to the sweep of the keen-edged blades. Then as the sun reached its zenith came the 'munching hour' and scythes laid aside, they gathered beneath some wide-spreading elm growing in the hedgerow for their simple meal of bread and bacon and was drawn out the little—perhaps not cheese. From under a cove of new-mown grass in the shade of the hedge so little—leg of haying tool and it was passed round in a recognised rotation from oldest to youngest, each as he took it giving a wipe to his lips and the back of his hand before he raised it to his mouth. How nice was the sense of delicacy to withdraw it before becoming suspicious of grooves from his mates, and yet not too soon, Rough wit and humour enlivened the half hour left before the resumption of toil, and when night came they returned to their neighbouring cottages in the little villages, weary and satisfied with the wiping of their faces with sweaty hands, yet redolent of the meadows, and with the sweet content of honest toil to be followed by well-earned repose.

There is no more sentiment in Western hayingmaked now than in a lawyer's bill of costs after a lost suit on a disputed lien note. The ties that bind the hired man and the farmer scarcely get beyond the atmosphere of work and wages, the one anxious to get the maximum of work, the other to do no more than he is paid for, and for a large part of the haying and mowing the hired man, the hired man on the rake or stooking sheaves.

In the earlier days of the settlement, when there was less money, there was more neighbourliness among the homesteaders; few men dared run the risk of offering money wages to a stranger which the employer might not enable them to pay. Neighbour worked with neighbour, exchanging work in return and there was a larger spirit of balance of equivalents.

Geneva As A World Capital

(The 'Eagle' Brooklyn)

In the strictest etymological sense the headquarters of a League of Nations will be a world capital. The Paris Conference has at least tentatively decided to accept Geneva instead of Brussels, despite the earnest appeal of the Belgians, supported by the French. President Wilson stood for Geneva. His reasons, cogently and temperately expressed, were hard to meet. No matter how deeply Belgium and Brussels have been wronged, making the city the League's centre of operations would not be a wise form of reparation. Even justifications should not be perpetuated as a feature of League organization.

Geneva is almost as proud of Jean Jacques Rousseau as of John Calvin. She is more and more a liberal and cosmopolitan city. Her first historian was Bonivard, whom the Duke of Savoy long kept in prison in the Chillon dungeon in the canton of Vaud, though not so long as Lord Byron hinted. Geneva thence has a liberal theology. But the modern Geneva can be classed as either Protestant or Catholic, since the canton has a majority of Catholics and a minority of Protestants. More than three-quarters of the people speak French.

Brussels, on the other hand, is Roman Catholic city in so far as organized religion goes. It was in a sense the refuge city of the Society of Jesus in 1914, when the war broke out. But it is also alive with socialist sentiment unfriendly to all religion, and that would have been a disadvantage from the League's point of view.

We cannot help thinking that Geneva was wisely chosen. It is something to be a part of one of the oldest of republics. It is something to be in a country of which the neutrality has long been guaranteed. And it is something to stand for the spirit of the mountain heights from which Freedom unfurled her standard to the air. If the Swiss are good hostkeepers, so much the better for them, and so much the better for the delegates who will be able, we are sure, to pay whatever prices may be charged for accommodations.

serve to Bert Enderby that he was going to be a little 'crowded' to get his hay stacked before his early barley wanted cutting. Bert would take it up quite as a matter of course.

"I'll come along with a team and our chore boy and give you a hand for a day or two," or perhaps Bert might say casually on a Sunday afternoon, "Our wheat is coming on together this year, I'm afraid it will be shelling out before we can get it down," and Jim would say nothing at the time, but just as Bert was leaving he might remark, as something which had slipped his notice at the time, "Well, no harm in Bert—oh, by the way, I can run up with the bonder for a couple of days, I'm not figuring on using it at home before Wednesday and neither fell in the slightest degree that they were conferring or receiving an obligation.

Young fellows keeping 'back' like the Dennis boys were a sort of freelances in the settlement, perfectly welcome to such hospitality on Sundays and other times as they might choose to put themselves in the way of accepting and very willing to lend a hand at the Dingle or Rosebank at busy seasons and proving themselves much more strenuous in their labors anywhere than at home.

This year things were different at Comestown Farm. Tom Wargied with a feverish energy, not only at the farm work outside, but on rainy days to make the house less forlorn, and to build a granary for the crop, and Jack fell in with his brother's ambitions with a willingness he had never shown before—not truly because he was becoming more reconciled to the life, but because in Tom's promise not to stay beyond the Fall there was a new horizon arising full of promise, not only of escape from the hateful monotony of the farm, but of glorious possibilities of its own.

vague yet suggestive rumours of trouble in South Africa with the surly burghers of the Transvaal. These rumours, as the year advanced, began to take more definite shape—negotiations were always being reported as taking place—now in Cape Town, now in London, now in Pretoria, but at one difficulty seemed to be smoothed away, another took its place. Slowly the conviction was growing in Britain that the Boers were seeking not a solution but the gaining of time to complete their preparations for a struggle.

The spirit born of pride of race and community blood began to stir and show itself in the other colonies—the farmers on far-up-country sheep farms.

In Australia realised that South Africa was a necessary link in the chain that bound them to the 'Old Land,' men there with whom action steps closely on the heels of realization, and New South Wales came first with her offer of help. Canada almost smiled when she heard of the foolish thought that the hour of need would come—smiled and followed suit more to show the world the fulness of her loyalty than from any anticipation that serious danger to the Empire was ahead. By the beginning of the year, the excitement of British news in the Western papers began to be replaced by long despatches from London and Cape Town and the news of August 4th, when the store-keepers in Minnesota were watching for the Winnipeg train with its newspapers almost as eagerly as they watched the thermometer on still, cloudless nights for the first sign of frost.

In the country settlements the excitement grew more slowly, especially among the Canadian farmers, who were not accustomed to take very much interest in matters of state or politics lying outside the Dominion, but there was an increasing spirit of unrest and eagerness for tidings among the Old Country people who, by letters and English papers, were kept more closely in touch with the progress of the controversy between Britain and Boer. Old Mrs. Dawson looked with cold disapproval at the rapidly increasing bulkiness of the mail-bay left every week at the post office to her the big packages of Graphics and London dailies for the Enderbys, Dennises, and others where only a fresh evidence to her mind not required—of the general extravagance and uselessness of their 'English folk.' In early summer, when the distribution of mail was apt to be rather casual, the keeping of the post office almost sure. Johnnie or 'Maggie' came from school, and Johnnie or she might be attended to or left to cool their heels on the doorstep (as it suited old Mrs. Dawson or her daughter, Mary Ann, to attend to them) nor the arrival of the mail-man was anticipated for an hour or so by half a dozen horns or rige tied to the garden fence and half a dozen young fellows stamping round the office (talking loudly and maybe boastfully of the speedy wiping out of the Boers, if only old Kruger would come to the scratch. And when the mail did come, they bustled in, the old lady almost beyond the endurance of her not very placid temper—snatching the letters out of a body's hand, as she said with great bitterness, before you seen where they were from or even look at the back of a post card, and 'himself' leaving what bit of work he ever does about the place to come and join in their foolishness about fighting and the like.

Old Dawson's lame back was rather a sore point with his wife and Mary Ann—possibly more so than in reality with the old man himself. The strangely intermittent character of the attacks of 'lameness' had long since worn out the family sympathy; little was heard of them during the slack seasons of the year, but they recurred with the advent of spring work and were far too acute during the haying or harvest to condone the jolting of the horse rake or the stooping to pick up sheaves in the stooping of the grain. The 'lameness' was always at its best round the 12th of July and could stand a long tramp in an Orange march, or the sitting on a hard, backless bench in a hot, stuffy hall to listen to rousing orations of King 'Billy' and the Boyne; it was not injuriously affected by an occasional tramp from sobriety—though for some there was even less domestic sympathy for the lameness of his excuses than for the lameness of his back.

To 'Old' Dawson the war excitement came rather by way of a god-send. Early in the spring, moved by a curious freak of mingled pig-headedness and bigotry, he had resigned the office of postmaster, and though he had subsequently withdrawn his resignation on the request of the Enderbys and some of his other settlers, he knew full that the request was based less on appreciation of his own merits than on the anxiety of getting any one else to take it who would be equally conveniently situated to the town life. During the week or two which elapsed between his resignation and its withdrawal, the old man had talked rather freely of his loyalty and Protestantism which would not allow him to keep a government office—it was worth twelve dollars a year—under a Grit Government with a 'Roman' for prime minister, and though Jim Hardie and Bert Enderby had treated his troubles quite seriously—at any rate to his face—Tom Dennis and some of the other English boys had not been quite so considerate, and had fallen into the way of chaffing the old man, and affecting to believe that his resignation would create quite a stir in official circles at Ottawa. The chaff was really very harmless, but it touched him on his tenderest spot, and Old Dawson, though he affected to treat it with good-humoured contempt, in reality resented it deeply, and was much more annoyed when the war excitement edged the whole incident to be forgotten by all but himself; he might have easily forgiven a jest at the expense of his wife or Mary Ann, but never at the expense of his conceit of himself.

OPPORTUNITY
for Retail Merchants

THE next few years will mark a tremendous change in the business of retailing.

Motor Transportation,
now reduced to a low-cost basis, gives retailers a great opportunity for business growth because it widens their trading area.

The Ford One-Ton
Truck makes available this opportunity. It is Motor Transportation at low cost
—low first cost, low maintenance cost, low operating cost.

A small outlay will motorize

your deliveries and open to you the opportunity for business expansion.

Complete Trucks—Two
Standard Bodies

Ordinary hauling and delivery work can be best adapted to two standard types—the Stake
Body and the Express Body.

These two body types are kept in stock ready for immediate delivery. They insure the maximum efficiency from the Ford Truck.

Both types have the Delcotron Club with the two-way windshield which gives the proper protection from the weather.

AGRICULTURAL SOCIETY

tion is the National Standard of ing.

The individual that is satisfied with "any old thing" is of little benefit to himself and the community.

Now is the time for the farmers to get united, take independent political action and demand a square deal for
"If you want a thing well done you must do it yourself and not leave it to others."

Where could we find a better place to begin such work than in the U.F.A.'s and the Agricultural Societies.

Strawberry Culture

BY M. J. TINLINE B.S.A.
Supt., Scott Experimental Farm.

Strawberries of the hardiest varieties have thrived well on the Scott Experimental Station, even last season the Dakota variety produced a fair crop although the berries were smaller than usual. This particular variety is a selection made at the Dakota Agricultural College. It produces runners in more abundance than most kinds. The fruit is small compared with the best sorts but is of good flavor. This variety is recommended for northwestern Saskatchewan for home gardens.

Strawberry plants can be secured from any of the western nurseries and the present is a good time for setting out. The preparation of the soil should be started early in the season, summer-fallow or well worked garden land should be harrowed down and sanded or disced until quite firm as the strawberry plants root near the surface of the ground and making the soil firm brings the moisture up to the root zone.

In setting out, the matted rows system is the best to adopt. If the plants are put 18 inches apart in the row the runners will soon fill the intervening spaces and a continuous row of plants will be established. The rows should not be closer than four or five feet apart. It is considered advisable to prevent the plants from fruiting the first year by plucking off the blossoms.

Winter protection consists in covering the plants to a depth of ten inches with straw and leaving on until the middle of May.

tural Society you Boost yourself.

Rye Doing Well

Over one thousand acres have been seeded to rye in this district this year and if the crop that has come under our notice is a good criterion, viz, that of R. Felson's, it is just the thing for the district. R. Felson's rye was sown on May 15th, on May 20th it had a good standing of three inches in height.

Whilst talking about rye, we may note for our readers, that the above mentioned is in part sown upon sand drifted to the land, and is showing good despite the lightness of the land.
It has a great value as a feed crop
last season on the Perry farm, it grew to five feet and would have made excellent hay, if cut at the right time.
This also was on sandy land.

Pte Devignon has arrived at Portland on his way home.

Mr. Herbert must be going to do things; he was seen on Tuesday morn-

dozen sacks of various sorts and sizes.

Eighty-five degrees at eleven o'clock on Monday registered the beats all records for May.

"GO TO SUNDAY SCHOOL"

DAY" SUNDAY, MAY 25

Our Provincial Government has seen fit to issue a proclamation calling upon all people in the Province on May, 25th to attend some Sunday School session that day.

THE ALBERTA SUNDAY SCHOOL
FEDERATION has prepared a special programme for that occasion and has distributed the same in all sections of the Province.

An effort is being made in this way
to arouse interest in the work of Religious Education. The various denominations have joined their forces for this work and thus present a united front.
Only one in ten in the Province attend Sunday School now. Why not all turn out that day.

It may mean that in a number of Districts, someone will have to take the lead for the day. Why not call a meeting for that day and discuss the religious need of the Community and suggest plans for the meeting of the week? There is an opportunity for the whole Province to unite in a common good, and we trust to hear of many successful gatherings.

We build our character by the bricks of habit that we pile up day
by day. Each seems a little thing, but before we are aware of it, we have shaped the house we live in.

Men who accomplish most never seem in a hurry, no matter how much they have to do.

The Dawn of a New Immigration Policy

Mr Calder, the minister of immigration, in laying his immigration bill before the house at Ottawa on the 24th April, made a powerful speech that has attracted wide attention and given rise to much discussion. For all dwellers on the prairie it contains points of deep interest.

It is refreshing beyond measure to see a cabinet minister rise in his place, and with courage and frankness plainly tell the house and the country that the immigration policy pursued in the past years has been nothing short of a tragedy. No political party in the last twenty-five years can escape reproach in this connection.

We will take the liberty of going much further than the hon. member the policy followed has been criminal.

The great aim of quantity as the first essential, to the exclusion of quality, has always apparently been the object of the department. To dump the immigrant on the Quebec dock and then leave him to his own reflections and devices, has been considered the acme of humane treatment. To allow a government department of the first rank, such as immigration, to be controlled in such a fashion as to be completely out of touch with the provincial executives, has apparently been regarded as the most admirable and thorough method of dealing with an acute problem.

One of the glaring defects in the present system, is the absence of links between Ottawa and the provincial legislatures; and also between the latter and the village, town and city councils, together with the most important units of all, the rural municipalities, in the matter of immigration.

With a sub department of immigration attached to the provincial executives, a chain would be established between Ottawa and the rural councils.

These latter exclusively composed of men entirely connected with the land, would constitute a source of office at Ottawa, and thereby be a sheet anchor for the immigrant.

Assuming such a scheme to be feasible, one of the first points to consider would be the establishment of a thorough plan of scientific publicity. Liberal expenditure should be a marked feature. The cost to be apportioned between the councils and the sub department, and the Ottawa central office. Care being observed that the Federal government carried the heaviest proportion.

In this manner, in addition to the other reforms, it might be possible for many desirable localities, now shrouded in obscurity, to emerge into the vitalizing lime light of extended public notice.

In this very briefly alluding to a subject that so closely touches individual interests, as well as seriously affecting the future of the West, we indulge in the hope that Mr Calder will succeed in setting his house in order.—Robert R. Jukes.

Artland Notes

By Robert Jukes

Dr. Moran's medical report is a grave document. That a preventable disease, such as typhoid, should cast its ugly shadow over these windswept prairies, induce reflections as grave as the report itself.

It is extremely satisfactory, however, to note the energy of the Manitou Lake Council in their prompt response to the situation. Action to the front with strength must from all residents, the Council will, we trust, find the duties of inspectors are of little value unless they are effective, and consequently the Health Officer's report will be, let us hope, of a more cheerful tone.

The Outkine extension of the C.P.R. has been shut down by the Ottawa Government, for the present.

We understand that there is a good chance of another elevator being built in Artland.

The "Home" Co. will be the "Outfit" representative of theirs was a recent visitor. He expressed satisfaction with the result of various little towns in the district.

He also stated that if the present favorable conditions of the crop continued the Co. with probability, at a later date, run up an elevator.

The Merchants Bank of Canada opened their branch here, last Friday.

We note the return, a few days ago, of Mr. Casey, from a short visit to the West.

Brady Pie Social, May 23rd
We should like to see all members on the Returned Soldiers Committee present also everybody else who has donated to the fund as it is intended to decide how the money raised for the boys shall be used.
